The American Foreign Press Service of the American Foreign Press Service at late residence. Self-at all of the American Foreign Press Service at late residence. Self-at all of the American Foreign Press Service of New York and correspondent of the Roman daily L'Epocs and of La Donua, a woman's magazine, and a tutor to the flaughter instead of reclining there so comfortably and indulging in your favorite rastime, "erclaimed Judith Arnold to her friend, Marcia Allen.

"Yes, Judith, I must confess that I am bored, and the story that you contider so delightful has proven to me just the contrary."

"Why, dear, I cannot understand—you have been such a bookworm."

"Bot Judith," Marcia interposed, "I guess the story is interesting enough—but I have grown so tired of reading but I have grown so tired of reading write ahead a story about my death but I have grown so tired of reading write ahead a story about my death but I have grown so tired of reading write ahead a story about my death but I have grown so tired of reading write ahead a story about my death but I have grown so tired of reading write ahead a story about my death but I have grown so tired of reading write ahead a story about my death but I have grown so tired of reading write ahead a story about my death but I have grown so tired of reading write ahead a story about my death but I have grown so tired of reading write ahead a story about my death but I have grown so tired of reading write ahead a story about my death but I have grown so tired of reading write ahead a story about my death but I have grown so tired of reading write ahead a story about my death but I have grown so tired of reading leminaries. is alabastar whiteness and soulful cyes, likened to great pools, and the wondership harces with figures of Adonises, heade of Apollos, and their beautiful white hands, Judith. I wish I could read descriptions as they really are."

"Now, Marcia, just imagine reading about little "Mise Plainbody" with straight hair instead of the curly lecks and with an ordinary complexion instead of one compared to a rose, and an ordinary mouth instead of the beautifully arched lips, likened to a Cupid's bow—and imagine a hero with big rough hands."

"Tes, I think I would find it very in tresting. I would just love to read of a bear with big rough lands."

"Tes, I think I would find it very in creating, I would find it very in creating. I would just love to read of a bear with big rough lands."

"Marcia, you are impossible. Justifully and the brawny muscles that have accomplished so much—where would the country be if it depended on the matinee idol or the drawing room pest?" wrathfully spoke Marcia. "And you may be sure Judith, the added, hughingly, "if 'Mr. Right' should ever come along hope he will have big rough hands."

"Wall, dear, I wish you luck, but not for me. I would be sure hard two policy." "Part Judith, it was the big rough hands and the brawny muscles that have accomplished so much—where would the country be if it depended on the matinee idol or the drawing room pest?" wrathfully spoke Marcia. "And you may be sure Judith, "she added, hughingly," "If Mr. Right' should ever come along hope he will have big rough hands."

"Wall, dear, I wish you luck, but not for me. I would much prefer the author's description," replied Judith, "but, Marcia dear, I must not forget my errard; Aunt Louise has written, but, Marcia dear, I must not forget my errard; Aunt Louise has written, but, Mr. All and Church I was an invested on the maxing of the country be if it depended on the maxinee of the country be if it depended on the maxinee of the country be if it depended on the maxinee of the country be if it depended on the maxinee of
